Responding to Employees in Distress

The Office of Campus Culture and Compliance (OC3) has developed this informational guide to aid in assisting employees in their response to those who may pose a threat to self or others. (Issues relating to students in distress should be directed to the Student Response Team).

If any Individual Appears Dangerous or is Threatening Harm to Self or Others

CALL 911 (If dialing 911 from a campus phone, you must dial 9+911)

- Safety is an immediate concern; verbal or physical threats to harm others; active threats of suicide and resists help.

If You Encounter a Disruptive or Distressed Employee

CALL BEHAVIORAL INTERVENTION TEAM MEMBER

- Safety is not an immediate concern; may pose a threat of harm to self or others, but does not present an imminent safety concern. (e.g. demonstrates bizarre behavior or communication; disruptive to the work environment.)

Helping a Distressed Colleague

A coworker is often first to observe signs of distress or trouble. Be aware of the following indicators of distress. Early recognition, intervention and referral are keys to getting someone help. Look for patterns or changes in behavior, not just isolated symptoms.
